E. and I went out this morning and bought a wedding present for the Dillon daughter who is being married on August 1. At the same time we were lured into purchasing some china for Versailles. We cannot go there this week end as the house is being occupied by Adlai Stevenson and a couple of his suite.

This afternoon Audrey and I went to the exhibition of decorated papers at the Galliéra Museum. It was really quite wonderful, showing all the colored printing which had been done on canvas, paper and so forth from the 18th Century on.
